Twenty senior Bachelor of Fine Arts students have been hard at work preparing for their undergraduate capstone show. In response to the trials and tribulations they, and all of us, have faced during the last year, the show has been aptly named All Things Considered. Nearly two-dozen students from various artistic disciplines are combining their efforts and talents to showcase the skills and concepts the BFA students have developed during their time at USU.

Art + Design students begin their journeys with foundations classes where they attempt to master the basics of two and three-dimensional art. During that same time, students are preparing to enter their desired emphasis. Once they have been selected for these competitive programs, students have two years to explore and develop skills in their chosen disciplines. All Things Considered highlights the respective creative research and development of the graduating seniors.
